++ Valid for broadcast between 1800 and 0600

Headline:
Cold tonight. Rain edging across Scotland Wednesday, turning to snow.

This Evening and Tonight:
A dry evening with clear spells and soon becoming frosty, then a cold night, but high cloud will gradually increase. Lower cloud will reach the west later with some rain and hill snow reaching the far southwest by dawn.

Wednesday:
Northeast staying dry and fairly bright. Elsewhere, rain, possibly freezing rain gradually spreading from south and west, but likely turning to snow, even to low levels as slowly spreads inland.

Outlook for Thursday to Saturday:
Rain and snow into Thursday, possibly some travel disruption, becoming drier by afternoon. Rain and hill snow spreading east Friday afternoon, clearing Saturday morning, then drier, brighter, but turning showery.
